What is the study about?

Australia has become part of an international move to have a better understanding of the needs of its people.

This type of knowledge is crucial for good decision making, planning and support for Australians.

The Living in Australia study is designed to meet this need.

The study, which started in 2001, is sometimes referred to in the media as the Household, Income and Labour Dynamics in Australia study (HILDA).

In this study we collect and analyse information from thousands of different families and individuals across Australia. We ask questions about life in Australia including your employment, family relationships, education and wellbeing. This allows researchers to find out, for example, how one area in your life can affect other areas and how people remain the same or change over time. It can also show us how external factors such as Government decisions and world events affect our lives.

Ultimately this study is a source of information to those making economic and social welfare decisions for all Australians.

Our thanks to you

A gift of $35 is our thanks to you for helping us with this study. Each person who participates will receive $35. Once everyone in your household has taken part, your household will receive an extra $35.

What's involved?

Taking part in the Living in Australia study involves answering questions about many different topics such as education, employment, retirement, income, family, and how you feel about different aspects of your life.

Your interviewer will ask everyone in your household aged 15 years or older to answer these questions.

This usually takes about 35 minutes. One person in your household will also be asked a few questions about the household in general.

This usually takes about 10 minutes to answer.

Depending on your circumstances, we will visit you next year to find out about your life in the last 12 months. To keep you up-to-date with the study's news and results, you will also be sent a copy of the Living in Australia newsletter next year. If you would like a copy of the latest newsletter please ask your interviewer.

Is this study voluntary?

Yes, participation in this study is voluntary.

However, because only certain people are chosen to become part of the study, the participation of everyone who is contacted is very important. Your views and experience in Australia are unlike that of anybody else, and your participation is vital to us. If you wish to withdraw your answers before the data is processed you can do so by calling 1800 656 670.

Why is this study so important?

The USA, Germany, Canada, Britain, Israel, Sweden, Korea, Japan, Indonesia and Belgium all have similar long term studies.

The value this has brought to these countries is considerable. Your participation will ensure Australia continues to benefit.

The information you provide is having a long term impact on Australia's direction. Every year that you and other households respond, the study increases in value and in its power to influence decision making.

Thanks to your input we now have information on topics such as:

- Planning for our aging population
- How smoking bans have affected the health and smoking behaviour of Australians
- Understanding unemployment patterns in Australia
- The impact of long working hours
- The reasons for changes in Australia's birth rate
- The personal and national costs of mental illness
- The division of household chores between men and women
- The effect of part-time work on families and women's careers
- Childcare: accessibility and who uses it
- The effect of household debt on Australians
- Maternity leave arrangements available to Australian women
- The impact of separation and divorce on income
- Job satisfaction of Australians
- How health influences the ability to work

Why have I been asked to take part?

We are interested in Australian households. To understand the ways in which they work, we need to talk to everyone in participating households.

You have been invited to take part in the Living in Australia study because you are living in the household of someone who is participating.

The study began in 2001 and the people who took part in the first year were chosen at random. Additional households were added in 2011. Everyone living in these households is invited to take part.

Participation is by invitation only. You are one of the lucky people who have been chosen to share your unique experience of living in Australia. This provides you with the opportunity to influence Government and social decisions with hard facts about your life and your household situation.
