You may ask yourself “Why is my participation so important to the HILDA study?”

The health and wellbeing of Australians is an important aspect of this year’s study with several questions relating to your health, health-care visits, eating habits, physical activity and sleep.

By participating in the study, you will provide an invaluable insight into the healthy habits and health care needs of Australians today, thus having a long term impact on Australia’s future.

When we last asked about general health in 2013, we also asked about the quality and quantity of sleep people get. It was data collected during this time that showed us that many Australians are not getting enough sleep. In fact, it shows that 17.6 per cent of males and 20.2 per cent of females get less than 6 hours of sleep per day.

The HILDA Survey data show that, in general, getting too little sleep is much more a problem than getting too much sleep. However, for men aged 65 and over and women aged 75 and over, getting too much sleep is a more common problem.

When asked about sleep quality many people reported that they had poor quality sleep, meaning they had trouble getting to sleep, or waking up in the middle of the night, or waking up too early. Nearly 27 per cent of females and 22 per cent of males report ‘fairly bad’ to ‘very bad’ sleep. As expected, parents with very young children report the least and the poorest sleep quality - particularly for lone parents.

As you can see, each one of our participants plays a vital role in the understanding of Australia’s health and health care needs, and we appreciate your continuous support and contribution to this one-of-its-kind study.
